It is of no use to talk of cold weather. It is every where, and the poor, the very poor, how many of us ever think, when we are ensented about our warm oves, all comfortable, that so many have not even the necessaries of life, or nourishment to support the wastes of the body, while shivering over the few em-bers that give of their last failing light or heat, and return to straw, with light coverings, and shiver out the long, cold nights. It is a thought that has given us great pity and sorrow, especially for poor chil-dren, that are only brought into this world to partly live, to die miserably, with but very little hope enjoyment in this cold and uncharitable world. It a serious thought. So few of as ever know or give the least thought to the destitution and misery ver around us; and yet fled is love, and gave us enty, and the poor we have always.

James Clark, aged about seven or eight years, a son of Dr. Clark, Route agent on the A. & N. Railroad, had his dog killed by one of the passing trains. The dog made every effort to get off the track, the engineer applied the air brakes, but the wheel struck the dog about six inches from his narrative, and de capitated his head. Jim had his account made ou by the depot agent, and presented to Foote, conduc tor, who said he would use every means to procure him another dog, or pay damages. The bill was pre ented to the proper officers at Atchison. A counc was had, and the managers concluded, by the advice of their attorney, that if Foote could procure another dog, irrespective of size, age, or color, for Jim, that a apromise might be effected, and save a suit for amages. A dog was procured, and brought down on the train, but before he was delivered, a despatch came ahead of the train with orders to stop the dog and return him on next train. The conductor wa nonplussed, as Jim was present and willing to receive the dog. But as the conductor said it should be made right, Jim is waiting. The Railroad attorlars, when he prreticed medicine up in Burr-Oak, as it was all he could get, and wanted some token of suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a de remembrance of a certain class of men who refuse to pay doctors' bills. Jim thought a great deal of his dog. Sooner. He was not much on rabbits, but rould sooner lie by a warm stove. Jim's claim is for one dollar damage; as he can buy two dogs for that money, it is thought by many that Foote will yet secure another dog, provided he is not caught. Even if he does, Jim is liable to be arrested for receiving stolen property.

C. B. BICKFORD & CO.'S. HE WAS NOT A PROPHET.—It is said that when Greenbacks were first made a legal-tender, a private banker on Broadway, New York, framed one of the first issues, and surrounded it with a horder of deep mourning, beneath which he wrote this epitaph: "Sacred to the memory of departed value. The person is not yet born who will see this note redeemed." The note was taken down on Thursday last, and it is now in the possession of the Government, having been redeemed in gold. The banker evidently got his ideas from Pemocrats of the Pendleton school, who declared that the Greenback was sent forth, "like Cain, with a brand of shame stamped on its brow." He was not a prophet.

During his illness a swab was used by his attendants to remove the phlegus or matter, as it collected in his throat, and obstructed his respi ration. One night, shortly before his death, Fred. Moser was sitting up with him. In one of the patient's choking spells, the swab could not be found and as there was no time to lose, Moser thrust his fore-finger and thumb down his throat, and removes the phlegm. Moser either had a scratch on his fingers, or received one from the patient's teeth, in placing his fingers in his month.
